The human right to peace and migration¹

I

The Spanish Society for International Human Rights Law (SSIHRL) welcomed on 30 October 2006 the adoption of the Luarca Declaration on the Human Right to Peace, which was drafted by a Committee of independent experts and it was the culmination of a process of extensive consultations with Spanish civil society, with the support of the Catalan Agency for Cooperation to Development.

Following the adoption of the Luarca Declaration, the SSIHRL has continued in all regions of the world the process of consultations with civil society through the organization of conferences and expert meetings on the human right to peace². In 2010 the SSIHRL will call for a World NGO Conference to analyze and incorporate inputs received from international civil society and to adopt the final text of the Universal Declaration on the Human Right to Peace which will be submitted to the HR Council, urging its Member States to initiate the official codification of the human right to peace.

On 15 March 2007 the Luarca Declaration on the Human Right to Peace was presented to the fourth session of the Human Rights Council in an oral statement delivered by UNESCO Etxea on

II

According to the International Organization for Migration (IOM)⁴, there are currently more than 200 million migrant workers in the world. A third part live in Europe, being slightly below the figure of those living in Asia and North America. Both migration North-South and South-South are very frequent.

The present global crisis has increased the victims of famine and extreme poverty which in turn generates a parallel increase in population displacement and mass migration to safer regions, either within their own country (IDPs) or outside (mass exodus, international migration, refugees). These massive population movements affect social peace of the country in which they occur, or may endanger international peace and security (international migration).

Migration and peace are thus closely linked. The international community affirmed in 1994 that “poverty and environmental degradation, combined with the absence of peace and security, human rights violations and the varying degrees of development of judicial and democratic institutions are all factors affecting international migration”⁵. Moreover, it also indicated in 1995 that social development is also clearly linked to the development of peace, freedom, stability and security, both nationally and internationally⁶.

Displaced persons are a vulnerable group that suffers from massive violations of their human rights. In situations of extreme poverty and social exclusion, they live in slums around the urban areas of developing countries without access to their most basic needs, such as food, drinking water, sanitation, education, health and employment. Many people who decide to undertake a migration perish in the effort, or are rejected by the immigration and security authorities of potential host countries. If, in the best case, they settle in developed countries, often suffer social marginalization, discrimination and sexual or labour exploitation, particularly if they are women or children. This structural violence is incompatible with peace.

³On 15 March 2007 both the SSIHRL and the International Society of Human Rights (Frankfurt) convened an open Information Meeting on the Luarca Declaration; on 16 March 2007, the SSIHRL organized a Technical Meeting with NGO and human rights experts with a view to building a common strategy for a world-wide campaign on the human right to peace; 11 June 2007, both UNESCO Etxea and SSIHR organized an additional parallel meeting on the relationship between peace and solidarity rights; on 12 September 2007, the SSIHRL in collaboration with the UNESCO Liaison Office in Geneva organised a Roundtable on the legal content of the human right to peace; on 21 September 2007, the SSIHRL organised the commemoration of the International Day of Peace in the Council Chamber of the Palais de Nations; on 7 March 2008, the SSIHRL, the International Society of Human Rights (Frankfurt) and UNESCO Etxea organised a Roundtable on the relationship between extreme poverty and the human right to peace; on 4 June 2008, the SSIHRL and UNESCO Etxea organised a Roundtable on the right to education on peace and human rights; on 12 September 2008, the SSIHRL and UNESCO Etxea organised a Roundtable on the human right to peace and indigenous peoples; on 19 September 2008, the SSIHRL, UNESCO Etxea and the NGO Liaison Office of UNOG organised the commemoration of the International Day of Peace in the Council Chamber of the Palais de Nations; on 17 March 2009 and the SSIHRL Etxea UNESCO organized a roundtable on the human right to peace and racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance

The emerging international migration law should be built on two principles recognized to all human beings: the right to emigrate and the principle of non discrimination.

Article 8 of the Luarca Declaration on the Human Right to Peace addresses the right to migrate in these terms:

1. Everyone has the right to emigrate and to settle peaceably, and also to return to his/her country of origin. No foreigner may be expelled without the proper guarantees provided for in International law and in accordance with the principle of non refoulement.
2. In particular, everyone has the right to emigrate if his right to security of person or his right to live in a secure and healthy environment (...)
3. Everyone has the right to participate, individually or in a group, in the public affairs of the country in which he/she has his/her habitual residence.
4. Every person or group has the right to the establishment of specific mechanisms and institutions for participation which ensure the free and public expression of his/their individual and collective concerns and claims.

Equality before the law and non discrimination in the enjoyment of human rights are structural principles of international human rights law which reaffirm the principle of dignity of human beings and are indispensable for establishing the international human rights law system⁷. The Inter American Court of Human Rights stated that the latter principles are norms of “ius cogens on which are based the whole legal national and international order and that permeate the entire law”⁸.

The International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Member of Their Families of 1990 reiterates the principle of non discrimination and respect of all rights to migrant workers and their families (Art. 7). Part III of the Convention recognizes the rights to be granted to all migrant regardless of their regular or irregular status in the host country. The Convention grants them a broad range of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights⁹.

The principle of non-discrimination against immigrants should be enforced by those State Parties that have ratified the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of 1966¹⁰. Although arts. 2.1 and 26 of this latter international treaty do not expressly prohibit discriminatory measures against a person who may be a migrant worker (with or without papers), the clause contained in article 26 in fine (the prohibition of discrimination on "other status") is so broad that it certainly includes the status of "migrant workers"¹¹.

Moreover, although article 1.2 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination of 1965¹² does not prohibit distinctions between "citizens and non citizens", its committee has clarified that the difference in treatment based on citizenship or immigration status will constitute discrimination if the "criteria for such differentiation, judged in light of the objectives and purposes of the Convention, does not achieve a legitimate objective and is not proportional"¹³. The Inter American Court of Human Rights had clarified that "the migratory status of a person can not constitute a justification for depriving him/her of the enjoyment and exercise of his/her human rights, including those of labour"¹⁴.

Women and children constitute two groups particularly vulnerable to human rights violations when they become migrants. The Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995 examined the situation of migrant women and called upon States to recognize their vulnerability as a consequence of violence and other forms of abuses¹⁵. The Commission on Human Rights indicated that both origin and destination countries should take appropriate legal measures against intermediaries that deliberately promote the clandestine movement of workers. According to this human rights body, intermediaries not only exploit women migrant workers but also violate their human dignity¹⁶. The General Assembly recalled that States should promote and safeguard human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrants in accordance with international human rights law, whatever their immigration status, especially those of women and children¹⁷.

The former Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants stressed the problem of violence against women migrant workers due to their double marginalization as women and as migrants¹⁸. There exist a high number of women who are obliged to cross borders and make long distances to engage in poorly paid work at home. It follows that they have a high risk of suffering situations of isolation and subordination, including physical or psychological violence. The kinds of abuse and violence suffered by women migrant workers include the withholding of their wages, acts of physical and sexual violence, undernourishment, the seizure of their passports, and the lack of medical and health care, among other abuses¹⁹.

¹⁹ Report submitted by the Special Rapporteur, Mrs. Gabriela Rodríguez Pizarro, supra, para. 63

The Statistical Office of the International Labour Organisation noted in 2004 that there were 218 million children in situations of child labour, of whom 126 million performed hazardous work²⁰. Many of them had left school as a result of emigration. The main factor behind the migration of child labour is poverty and family destitution. Because of their inexperience and age, children are taken on for badly paid and menial jobs, where they are particularly vulnerable to exploitation in the workplace, manual jobs and work in factories, and even sexual exploitation²¹.

To combat trafficking in persons, especially women and children, the current Special Rapporteur on the human rights of migrants²² appealed States to ratify and implement the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons Especially Women and Children²³.

According to the Convention on the Rights of the Child, States are obliged not only to suppress and punish any act that violates the dignity of children, but also to prepare the child for responsible life in a free society, in the spirit of understanding, peace, tolerance, equality of sexes, and friendship among all peoples²⁴.

The outcome document of the Durban Review Conference, adopted on 24 April 2009, urged States to adopt a comprehensive and balanced approach to migration, “through the international dialogue on migration, by developing real partnerships between countries of origin, transit and destination, and by exploring all possible synergies between the management of migration and the promotion of development, while fully taking into account the human rights of migrants” (paragraph 77)

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Human Rights Council should promote the right to migrate as part of the human right to peace, which includes four rights, all of them essential to the effective implementation of the human right to peace: the right not to migrate if conditions in the country of origin provide a sufficient degree of development; the right to emigrate if, despite everything, the person chooses freely to emigrate; the right to settle peacefully in the territory of another State; and the right to return to the State of origin.

Migrants and their families are human beings who are entitled to inalienable rights that should be protected from the perspective of social justice and equity, non-discrimination and gender equality, respect for cultural diversity, linguistic rights, solidarity, peace and friendly relations among all nations, races, ethnicities or religions.

All States should urgently ratify the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Member of Their Families as a means to eliminate the illegal movement and transit of migrant workers and to ensure the protection of their minimum human rights.

Member States should be aware of the existing links between efforts to combat racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia to which migrants are subjected, and the construction of democratic, interactive and egalitarian multiculturalism, as well as the promotion of dialogue among cultures, civilizations and religions, as a means to achieve the human right to peace and to combat racial and religious intolerance.

States should respect the principle of non discrimination against migrants, as stated in the two International Covenants on Human Rights, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, Conventions No. 143 and 151 of the ILO on migrant workers, ILO Convention concerning Migration for Employment, the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and the outcome of the Durban Review Conference. These treaties oblige States parties to ensure to all individuals within its territory and subject to its jurisdiction the rights recognized in these treaties, reaffirming in this way the principle of equality and non discrimination.

States should pay particular attention to those forms of discrimination against women migrant workers, according to the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action of the Fourth World Conference on Women in 1995; to promote women participation at all levels of decision-making on peace and security issues (resolution 1325 of the Security Council); and to foster the role of the state in the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms of all migrant women.

Finally, States should assume their obligations regarding to the suppression and punishment of trafficking of women and children migrants, as well as labour and sexual exploitation of women and child migrants.
